

Introducing Green Thumb's New Fundraising Manager: Nicole Macrae

After a long and rewarding maternity leave, which stretched out to full six years, I have come back to another worthy occupation, fundraising for Green Thumb Theatre.

Before my long break, I was a Fundraising Manager in a family welfare charity in London England. I have remained connected to fundraising, since moving back to Vancouver, by volunteering for other non-profits and being a Board Member of West Side Family Place. I have also put my Masters in Museum Anthropology to good use as an education volunteer for the Museum of Anthropology.

For the past six years, I have been waiting for a very good reason to leave what I felt was a good "gig", staying home with the kids. I just couldn't fault or find any reason not to work for Green Thumb Theatre. Who wouldn't want to work for a charity that has a long solid history, a fantastic reputation, artistic integrity, and is highly effective in its approach to children and youth on important issues, as well as bringing their work to so many who would otherwise never see a live production? Naturally, as a parent and an arts supporter, I want to do what I can to help Green Thumb Theatre continue their success.
